Country: Bangladesh

Course: Advanced Diploma of Electrical Engineering

Institute: TAFE NSW - South Western Sydney Institute, Granville College

Md Muduyzzaman goes by the nickname Sujon which means 'good man'.

Sujon came to Sydney from Dhaka in 2004 to study an Advanced Diploma of Electrical Engineering at South Western Sydney Institute, Granville College.

"I came to Granville College because it had such a good reputation in my country. Some of my brothers had already studied there and they said it was a good environment.

"The course was very practical with modern equipment and I could use the facilities whenever I wanted.

"I understand the first year of the TAFE NSW course in Advanced Diploma of Electrical Engineering is the same as offered at many universities. But I think it is more hands on, more practical.

"I didn't have an English background in my country, so I studied English for 20 weeks when I first arrived in 2003. My teachers really helped me to prepare for my TAFE course. I had to do presentations and assignments every week! I studied English and electrical engineering at the same time.

Sujon developed extensive English language skills in a short time. His engineering results improved with his increased language skills. At the end of second semester, Sujon achieved outstanding results in all his subjects. In many ways he lived up to his nickname 'good man'. After completing a degree in Electrical Engineering Sujon returned to Bangladesh.
